ChocoLove

1. Introduction:
   My website is for a chocolate store called ChocoLove.   The website allows customers to purchase chocolates online. The shop owner has a blog and the website includes the blog posts.

2. Features:
   A fixed top navbar and breadcrumbs.
   The following pages:

   > Home – Chocolate pictures and a brief synopsis of the company and the monthly specials.
   > About Us – A page that tells the story of the owner and a link to the blog
   > Order online – A page where you can order chocolates for in-store pick up or shipping.
   > Contact Us – Store address, tel, email and map of the location. A form the visitor can fill out to receive updates via email.

3. Lessons Learned
   - I spent a lot of time on minute details such as my navbar and footer.
   - I had a hard time getting my map size to work out for both a wide screen and mobile. I don't think I have quite figured that out yet.
   - I had a hard time with my images looking good in both a wide screen and on mobile. I realized in the end that my pictures were not looking as good as I wanted them to be because I started of with images that were not all the same size. I think if I start with images that are the same size it would be a lot easier. That is why for the blog page I ended up using the same picture for the cards in a row so I could experiment with the size.
   - I used a program called lunapic to remove the background from my logo. My footer looked a lot better after I did that.
   - I had a hard time getting text to show up over my jumbotron picture but I think I finally got it to look good.
